Credit rating agencies (CRAs) are accused of bearing a strong responsibility in the subprime crisis, by having been too lax in the ratings of some structured products. For example the title of the article by Mason and Rosner (2007) is self-explanatory: “How misapplied bond ratings cause mortgage-backed securities and C.D.O. market disruptions”. The authors of that paper argue in particular that CRAs under-evaluated some parameters that were crucial in the assessment of risks such as ...
